CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (PRWEB) DECEMBER 05, 2017

The University of North Carolina Kenan-Flagler Business School has become the newest member of the Business School Alliance for Health Management \(BAHM\), an international consortium of leading MBA programs with a health sector focus.

“Our board is pleased to welcome UNC Kenan-Flagler as the 17th member of an organization that has crystallized into a strong, collaborative network of business schools focused on promoting scholarship and innovation in the health sector,” said Kevin A. Schulman, BAHM’s board president and a professor of medicine and business administration at Duke University.

Formed in 2010, BAHM supports business school health management programs and their faculty, students and graduates in educating the next generation of leaders and advancing thought leadership in the field. BAHM initiatives include annual student case competitions, educational webinars, research collaborations, and Health Management Policy and Innovation (HMPI), an online journal focused on U.S. and global health sector challenges from a business perspective.

“Our goal is to improve outcomes, access and value in the business of health care by conducting influential research and providing comprehensive education for future leaders working in this arena,” said
